

The author attributes much of his bowhunting success to using a Trophyline Ambush Saddle.

Treestand or Saddle?

Here's why the saddle is overall better and more versatile, according to this whitetail fanatic. By Chris Eberhart

It was opening morning 2007, and a friend of mine was hunting one of his best locations. Just after daylight three bucks strolled into view—a spike and two mature 10-pointers. The first buck that came into range was one of the big ones. Sitting in his treestand, my friend was unable to draw because he was silhouetted and in plain sight of the other two bucks. He just couldn't move. Thinking he would surely get a shot at the second big buck, he waited. Both the second 10-pointer and the spike meandered in close to 10 yards but, unfortunately, on the wrong side of the tree. Despite his best efforts, my friend was unable to draw because the trunk was in the